Key Findings for CAS

- Compared to CSU Overall, CAS had higher average agreements across all organizational themes in 2021. Rates were lowest around college/division leadership accountability themes and highest around work culture theme.
- Compared to college/division overall, men had favorable responses in nearly all organizational themes. Women and employees who identified as transgender/non-binary/nonconforming had less favorable results, particularly around work culture and leadership accountability.
- CAS college/division and department/unit leadership accountability average percentage agreements were also lowest among racially minoritized employees and tenure/tenure track faculty.
- State Classified employees reported the highest agreement scores in nearly all organizational themes. All other types had less favorable average agreements, with rates lower than the college/division overall in nearly all organizational themes, and more so around college and department leadership accountability.
- Compared to CUS overall, CAS had lower average agreements in 2021. However, there was a slight increase around favoritism in the college/division in 2021 compared to 2018.
- CAS had higher average agreements of employees who agreed/strongly agreed that the college/division encourages discussions related to diversity. However, rates were significantly lower on themes related to inclusiveness and retention of employees from diverse backgrounds in the college of agricultural sciences.
- While there was a decrease in agreements around most themes related to discrimination and harassment in CAS, results showed increasing rates around socioeconomic status, gender identity, and mental/physical disability. There was a slight decrease in bias, race/ethnicity, bullying, and sexual harassment in the college/division between 2018 and 2021.
